

Fort Riley Elk Facts

Historically, elk (or wapiti) ranged across much of the Northern Hemisphere, including the plains states. The species was extirpated over most of its range in the late 1800's. A program was initiated in cooperation with Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks in 1986 to reintroduce elk to Fort Riley. This reintroduction effort has restored a native component of the Kansas Flint Hills. Kansas residents and visitors have been provided with the opportunity to enjoy these majestic animals whether their interests are photography, hunting or just being able to view the elk in their native environment.

Likely Places

The elk herd residing on Fort Riley and surrounding lands has grown to the point that they can be found throughout the installation and on private lands. Fort Riley Outdoor Recreation Areas C, F, H, J, K, L, M, N, P and Q are the most likely places to find elk.

Daytime bedding areas include parts of timbered areas, which are especially preferred in times of high and low temperatures. Side hills in the prairie provide bedding areas with good visibility. Look for elk on side hills when temperatures are moderate. Drainages (or draws) are sought by the elk when they provide shelter from cold winds. However, it is not unusual to observe elk using open, grassland habitats under all weather conditions.

Food plots on Fort Riley are planted to provide elk and other wildlife with nutrition throughout the year. The best times to see elk feeding are in the early morning or late in the evening. Seasonal changes in food preference do occur with the elk on Fort Riley. Look for "elk sign" in and around food plots. Elk use winter wheat and alfalfa on and off-post when green vegetation is limited, particularly in late winter.

Fort Riley does NOT maintain a list of private landowners who allow elk hunting or viewing on their property. Fort Riley personnel do NOT track the elk off-post.

Hunting Elk on Fort Riley

The Kansas Department of Wildlife, Parks and Tourism establishes annual hunting quotas based on population size and age/sex composition. Applications for Kansas's elk hunting permits for Elk Unit 2 are available from the Kansas Department of Wildlife, Parks and Tourism. The state application summarizes the application procedure, number of permits available and state regulations pertaining to elk hunting. Hunting information on Fort Riley is available at Fort Riley's DPW Environmental Division Office located in Building 407, Pershing Court. Fort Riley's Hunting and Fishing Regulation requires that all elk hunters obtain a Fort Riley Elk Permit. These are free of charge. Hunters are required to take a 10 minute safety briefing prior to issuance of the Fort Riley Elk Permit. The briefing will familiarize hunters with Fort Riley specific regulations in force. Additional information for hunting on the fort can be found at <http://fortriley.isportsman.net>.

Elk begin to rut when cows come into estrus in early to mid September. During this time, bulls can be heard "bugling" to establish territories and to maintain harems of cows. Cows answer the bugles with calls of their own. An excellent way to get close to elk during this time of the year is to imitate the bugles and cow calls. Elk will often reply to your calls and sometimes will come to them.

Open Areas

NOTE: Fort Riley Military Reservation or portions of it may be closed at anytime, without prior notice, due to military activities. Substantial portions of the post are anticipated to be closed to rifle and muzzleloader hunting on any given day. The military mission has precedence over the announced hunting season.

Fort Riley's DPW-Conservation Branch is provided a list each Monday and Thursday of areas open for hunting. Monday's list has open areas through Thursday and Thursday's lists goes through the following Monday. Open areas further in advance are NOT available. More bow hunting areas are generally available on any given day than muzzleloader/rifle areas.
